PREFACE

THIS is substantially an abridgment of my 'Latin Dictionary for Schools' (Harper and Brothers, 1889). The vocabulary has been extended to include all words used by Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius, and Tacitus (in his larger works), as well as those used by Terence, Caesar, Sallust, Cicero, Livy, Nepos, Vergil, Horace, Ovid, Juvenal, Phaedrus, and Curtius. On the other hand, space has been saved by the omission of all detailed references to books and passages, only the name of the writer being indicated as authority for each word or phrase; and by limiting the illustrative citations to those which are typical or peculiarly instructive. Proper names, too, have been excluded, except those which, because of peculiarities of form or of their derivations, require special explanation.

In all other respects, the plan of the 'School Dictionary,' as explained in the Preface to it, has been followed, as far as the smaller size of the present work permits. In a few instances, errors which have been detected in the larger book have been corrected in this; and in two or three words, vowels, which were there left unmarked, are now distinguished as long, on the strength of later researches.

I take pleasure in acknowledging the valuable aid rendered me, in the preparation of this abridgment, by J. W. Marshall, late Professor of the Latin Language and Literature in Dickinson College, by whom most of the illustrative phrases and passages cited have been selected.

CHARLTON T. LEWIS.

NEW YORK, September 1, 1890.

SINCE this work was first published much light has been thrown, by researches in historical and comparative grammar, upon the pronunciation of Latin vowels in syllables long by position. The marks of quantity have therefore been carefully revised, to correspond with the present state of knowledge on this subject.

It is believed that in this edition the usefulness of the 'Elementary Latin Dictionary' is considerably increased by the addition of an Appendix containing the names of persons and places met in the Latin authors commonly studied in the first two years of the college course. For a list of the Latin writers and their works covered by this Appendix, and further information in regard to the system by which the proper names have been selected and arranged, see pages 953-954.

* An asterisk before a word means that it is not found in use, but is assumed to account for some derived form.

[] Remarks in square brackets relate to etymology. Forms printed in capitals are references to the Table of Roots at the end of the volume.

= The sign of equality before a Greek word means that the preceding Latin word is borrowed from that form in Greek.

(...) A form in the vocabulary is enclosed in a parenthesis to show, if a substantive in the nominative case, that it is used only in other cases; if an adjective, that it is not used in the positive degree; if a verb, that it is not used in the present system. Forms of incorrect orthography, found in some school-books, are enclosed in parentheses, with reference to the correct form.

— A dash in place of the genitive of a substantive, or of one of the principal parts of a verb, indicates that this case or this system is not in classical use.
